Alice, a little girl, is riding through a jungle with Julius a cartoon cat, on the back of an elephant who is being pushed by Rats. They come upon a pair of tigers making love. Alice sees them and tells Julius to get them. He shoots but they get away. The tigers run into a hole in the ground. The cat follows but the tigers have evaded him. Julius is still running and the tigers who had, in the meantime, hidden start chasing Julius. Alice who has been looking for Julius sees him running and joins him. The tigers are now chasing both of them.

The King, a lion, is sitting on his throne being entertained by a bunch of animals that are dancing and playing. Alice and Julius run into the scene still being chased by the tigers. They try to escape but cannot. The King orders the animals to kick Alice and Julius out. This is effectually done but they also include in the party of members exciting a dog very much afflicted with fleas.

Julius watching the dog scratching for dear life gets an idea. He calls over a flea and converses with him for a few seconds. The flea agrees to Julius's proposition. He calls to his fellow fleas and all depart for the kingdom where the lion reigns. They rain in on the King and all his kingdom. They all start scratching themselves but of no avail. A few little monkeys get pop guns and shoot at the fleas as they jump into the air. Two monkeys pick fleas off each other. One using a magnifying glass and the other a hammer.

In the meantime, Alice and Julius have been watching the whole performance and are laughing hysterically. The animals see this and they realize that it was they who did the dirty work. They all start chasing Alice and Julius.
